Setting Up Your E-mail Program To Not Leave Messages On The Server

Dear Valued Customer:

In this July issue, we try to help you enjoy sunny summer days while avoiding the "storm clouds" of online threats. First, we warn about a fake e-mail that claims to be from the iTunes Store with a $50 iTunes Gift Certificate; it's a scam designed to lure you into opening a malicious attachment. You'll also learn about another online threat called typosquatting, as well as how to set up your e-mail program to not leave messages on the server—a way to conserve storage space. The learning continues in the Great Sites section, where we share resources related to summer vacations, summer meal planning, and much more.

The goal of each of our eNewsletters is to keep our subscribers informed regarding their Internet connection and to improve their Internet experience. We think you'll find this information interesting.

E-Mail Scam - Watch For iTunes Gift Certificate Scam

Don't fall for the fake e-mail currently circulating that says you've been given a $50 iTunes Gift Certificate. It asks recipients to open the attached file to access a certificate code that purportedly can be used to buy music and other items from the iTunes Store. The e-mail is not from the iTunes Store, as it claims, but rather from a notorious scam machine known as the Pushdo/Cutwail spambot.

Those who open the attachment will not find a certificate code. Instead, by clicking on it, the recipient may inadvertently launch a malicious application that can install a Trojan horse virus on his or her computer. Once installed, this Trojan can then modify the Windows registry, potentially give hackers access to the infected computer by connecting to a remote server, and download and install even more malware components.

Keep in mind that e-mail notifications of genuine iTunes Gift Certificates will typically include the name of the sender along with a personal message, and will not hide the certificate code in a separate e-mail attachment. So pay close attention to any e-mails you receive that appear to be from the iTunes Store. And as always, think twice before opening any e-mail attachment.

That cable company contract is leaving some people burning mad

When you're in a hurry to do something, it's tempting to skip some steps. For example, some people rush into signing a bundle contract with the cable company because they think it'll save them money. But they forget to ask the right questions. What's the Internet usage limit and how much are the overage fees? What's this really going to cost per month? Will there be a fee for terminating the contract? Sadly, we're hearing of people getting burned by tricky fine print who end up spending more money rather than less.
